Cripple Creek.

All the world knows of Cripple Creek. How in the summer of 1891 the first ore was discovered, and how with varying ups and downs the town grew and prospered until the spring of 1896 saw a great city of 20,000 people, surrounded by camps and smaller towns which swelled the population of the greatest gold district on earth, to about 40,000 souls. Then came the two great fires with so brief a time between, sweeping away everything, and the world stood aghast at the greatness of the calamity. From everywhere came offers of help to rebuild the city, but all were rejected and the enterprising people who make up the population of Cripple Creek, went to work in dead earnest. To-day (October 1st, 1896,) only five short months after the fire, where once stood one and two story frame buildings with miserable shacks scattered here and there, now loom up magnificient structures of brick and stone, and Cripple Creek is transformed like magic from the crude western mining camp to a metropolitan city, with all the comforts and luxuries to be had in any place of like size, in the world.

Cripple Creek is the terminus of two railroads—The Florence & Cripple Creek and The Midland Terminal; is an important point on the Western Union and Postal Telegraph lines and is the commercial center and metropolis of a district 45 square miles in area. It has one of the most thorough systems of water works in the state, supplying in abundance the purest water; a fire alarm telegraph system recently completed by the Gausewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company of New York, and a thoroughly trained and efficient fire department, consisting of three hose companies and a hook and ladder company. Its public schools are of the best, and churches and religious societies are well represented. Its electric light plant is unsurpassed.

It is the headquarters of the mining men of the district, and of the principal companies operating in camp; its advantageous location rendering all the producers easily and quickly accessible, either by railroad train or other conveyance. Its superior hotel accommodations render it especially desirable as headquarters for those sojourning temporarily in the camp. It contains two large sampling plants, while another with electrical process is in operation.

In the following lists will be found 7,226 names. After deducting the names of mines, mining companies, incorporations etc., and making a liberal allowance for firms and names repeated, we find that Cripple Creek has a population of about 20,000.
